

BEST PRACTICE – STUDENT WELFARE MEASURES

ENDOWMENT PRIZE FOR TOPPERS

Student support in the broadest terms is the gamut of all activities that help in the progress of students in their studies. The range and the quality of student support services differ from institution to institution. Many factors contribute to the development and maintenance of quality - student – support systems.

Some of the factors are:

- The competitiveness of an institution to attract best students
- The status of the institution
- The socio-economic-education culture in which the institution operates.

Student welfare is a support service which encompasses a variety of services. With the increasing cost of education and entry of students from socially, economically and geographically challenged sections into institutions of higher education, it has become imperative that a best practice would be to ensure that no student would discontinue studies because of non-affordability and financial constraints. Though several scholarships are available to students from socially challenged sections, the financial support may not match their needs. Students not covered by statutory considerations find it most difficult to continue their studies because of financial difficulties.

In spite of 'earn while learn' 'poor boys aid fund', loans from banks, scholarships instituted by philanthropists and Alumni associations, there are still large body of students who find it difficult to continue their studies because of financial constraints. In addition, provision for medical and health services, provisions of hostel facilities, a forum for redressal of grievances and a mechanism to contribute to student welfare would qualify as a criterion for best practice.

Dept of Zoology from the academic year 2016-17 has adopted best practice of encouraging toppers in Zoology by giving cash prize as endowment prize in memory of Zoology department staff parents. This practice is continued successfully and every academic year students who achieve top marks in Zoology and Aquaculture were given prize amount.
